5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT, REPORTER

Pretty much everyone who lives in the Boston area has had a run in with a turkey. On the Green Line, I used to pass some sitting on the tracks in Brookline, and I have a friend who would regularly walk by turkeys during her commute in Cambridge. A video of a Cape Cod mailman trying to shoo away some toms on his work route went viral, even getting mentioned on the "Tonight Show" — prompting everyone I knew to share their own turkey stories. For a state so associated with the first Thanksgiving, maybe wild turkeys are just a natural part of the landscape? Well, now the state wants you to be extra aware when you see any wild fowl. Read more about why inside and at metroboston.us.

WEINSTEIN PLEADS NOT GUILTY TO RAPE CHARGES

1 Movie mogul Harvey Weinstein pleaded not guilty on Tuesday to charges of rape and sexual assault, his lawyer said, in the first cases involving the disgraced producer to be tested in criminal court since scores of accusers emerged last year. More than 70 women have accused the Miramax film studio's co-founder of sexual misconduct, including rape, in a series of incidents dating back decades. The accusations gave rise to the #MeToo movement, which has seen hundreds of women publicly accusing powerful men in business, government and entertainment of sexual harassment and abuse. Weinstein, 66, left Manhattan Supreme Court without speaking to reporters. Defense attorney Benjamin Brafman and Justin Henry, a spokesman for the prosecutor, confirmed that Weinstein had pleaded not guilty. "Mr. Weinstein has denied these crimes. He has never engaged in non-consensual sex with anyone," Brafman told reporters. "As terrible a crime as rape is, it is equally reprehensible to be falsely accused of rape. In his view, he has been falsely accused of rape."

FUEGO EXPLODES AGAIN, EVACUATIONS ORDERED

2 Guatemala's Fuego volcano exploded again on Tuesday, sending rescue workers scrambling for cover beneath the smoking peak, as the death toll from the weekend's eruption rose to at least 72. National disaster agency CONRED ordered evacuations and said that hot gas and molten rock were streaming from the volcano, which produced its biggest eruption in more than four decades on Sunday, showering ash on a wide area and sending lava flows through nearby towns. Before evacuations were ordered, authorities said the death toll had risen to at least 72, three higher than on Monday. Volcan de Fuego, which means "Volcano of Fire" in Spanish, is one of several active volcanoes among 34 in the Central American country. It lies near the colonial city of Antigua, a UNESCO world heritage site that has survived several major eruptions.The latest activity has been mostly on the far side of the volcano, facing the Pacific coast. The eruption on Sunday sent columns of ash and smoke 6.2 miles into the sky, dusting several regions with ash. Thousands of people have been evacuated, CONRED said.

AUTHORITIES CONTINUE SEARCH OF SPRINGFIELD HOME WHERE BODIES WERE FOUND

3 Police officers stand in front of the scene where three bodies were found on the property where Stewart R. Weldon lived in Springfield on Tuesday. Weldon, 40, is being held on $2 million bail for allegedly kidnapping and brutalizing two additional women in separate incidents. The three women whose remains were found at his home at 1333 Page Blvd. were identified Monday as Ernestine Ryans, 47, and America Lyden, 34, both of Springfield, and Kayla Escalante, 27, of Ludlow.

LEBRON: NO WHITE HOUSE VISIT FOR NBA CHAMPS

4 On the day the Philadelphia Eagles were supposed to be visiting the White House to celebrate their Super Bowl championship, participants in the 2018 NBA Finals ripped President Donald Trump and made it clear the NBA champion won't be going to White House, either. Speaking with the media on an off day Tuesday, members of the Cleveland Cavaliers and Golden State Warriors sounded off on the situation between the NFL champs and the president, and leading the charge was LeBron James. "It's typical of him," James said of Trump. "I'm not surprised. ... I know no matter who wins this series no one wants the invite, anyways. It won't be Golden State or Cleveland going [to the White House]. "It's not surprising, hearing the news today with the Eagles," James continued. "But I think more importantly we shouldn't, as Americans and especially the people in Philadelphia shouldn't let that news take away from what that unbelievable team did and accomplished."

ARGENTINA CANCELS WARMUP AGAINST ISRAEL

5 Argentina have canceled thits final World Cup warmup match against Israel scheduled for this Saturday in Jerusalem, striker Gonzalo Higuain said on Tuesday. "They've finally done the right thing," Higuain said in an interview with ESPN, confirming reports the game had been canceled following political pressure. The match in Jerusalem's Teddy Kollek Stadium was to be Argentina's final game before they kick off their World Cup campaign in Russia on June 16. The match against Israel had drawn criticism with the head of the Palestinian Football Association urging fans last weekend to burn pictures of Argentina striker Lionel Messi and replicas of his shirt if he played in the game. Palestinian FA chief Jibril Rajoub wrote to Claudio Tapia, the head of the Argentinian FA, last week accusing Israel of using the match as a "political tool." The stadium that was due to host the match is in west Jerusalem. The Palestinians want the eastern part of the city as the capital of a future state that will include the Gaza Strip and the Israeli-occupied West Bank. However, the status of the city generally is highly sensitive.

Kate Spade found dead in her Manhattan apartment

The famous fashion designer hanged herself and was found by her housekeeper, according to reports.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Designer Kate Spade was found dead in her Manhattan apartment on Tuesday.

Spade, 55, died by an apparent suicide, sources said. Officials told the Associated Press that housekeeping staff found Spade inside her Park Avenue apartment unresponsive around 10:20 a.m. Tuesday. She reportedly hanged herself.

Spade reportedly left a note, but officials did not know what the note said, according to the AP. Officials also said that they are not authorized to divulge details as the investigation is ongoing. The medical examiner will officially determine the cause of death, the NYPD said.

The New York Post, though, reported that the note mentioned her daughter, saying that she shouldn't blame herself for the suicide.

"Kate will be dearly missed. Our thoughts are with Andy and the entire Spade family at this time."

A spokeswoman for Kate Spade New York

Spade was a fashion designer and businesswoman best known for her line of handbags under the company name Kate Spade New York.

Spade was born Katherine Brosnahan in Kansas City, Mo. December 24, 1962. She was the accessories editor at the now-closed Mademoiselle magazine before launching her namesake company in 1993 with Andy Spade, brother of actor David Spade, whom she married in 1994.

Kate Spade New York, which now has more than 140 retail shops across the United States and more than 175 internationally, initially focused on handbags. Frustrated with the accessory, Spade wanted "a functional bag that was sophisticated and had some style," she told The New York Times in 1999.

Kate Spade New York eventually expanded to clothing, jewelry, shoes, stationary, bedding and fragrances. The brand was known for its bright colors and cheerful aesthetic. Spade and her husband appeared on the NPR podcast "How I Built This with Guy Raz" in Feb. 2017 to detail the rise of their iconic brand.

Spade sold her brand in 2003. Tapestry Inc., the handbag company formerly known as Coach, bought Kate Spade New York in May 2017. In 2016, Spade and her husband together launched a new company called Frances Valentine featuring handbags, shoes and accessories designed by Spade.

A spokeswoman for Kate Spade New York told The New York Times in a statement that while "Kate has not been affiliated with the brand for more than a decade, she and her husband and creative partner, Andy, were the founders of our beloved brand. Kate will be dearly missed. Our thoughts are with Andy and the entire Spade family at this time."

Next time you spot a turkey around Massachusetts, tell the state

The Massachusetts Division of Fisheries and Wildlife wants the public's help counting turkeys for a yearly survey.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

"Citizen involvement in this survey is a cost-effective means of gathering useful data, and can be a fun way for people to connect with nature."

Residential turkeys are a common sight in the Boston area. They prefer to roost on railings, roofs and cars. GETTY IMAGES

You may have seen them strolling the streets of Cambridge, or been chased down by one in Brookline. You may even follow them on Twitter.

We're talking about turkeys, of course, and the next time you see such a fowl, the state is asking that you take notice and fill out a survey.

Every summer, the Massachusetts Division of Fisheries and Wildlife conducts a Brood Survey from June 1 through Aug. 31 to estimate the number of turkeys in the state, and the division is asking that the public help participate.

"The brood survey helps our biologists determine productivity and compare long-term reproductive success while providing an estimate of fall harvest potential," according to Mass Wildlife. "Citizen involvement in this survey is a cost-effective means of gathering useful data, and can be a fun way for people to connect with nature."

Turkey nesting success, the division says, can vary based on a number of factors, like weather conditions, predator populations and habitat characteristics.

The state is asking residents to keep an eye out for hens (female turkeys), poults (newly-hatched turkeys), toms (adult male turkeys) and jakes (juvenile male turkeys). If you need help parsing out which is which, the state has a handy guide to identifying turkeys online.

Wild turkeys are active during the day, according to Mass Wildlife, and often roost in large trees at night to avoid predators. In residential areas, though, you may see turkeys roosting on railings, roofs and even vehicles.

Many Massachusetts residents have had a run-in with a turkey, but the state says you shouldn't let turkeys intimidate you. If they get too close or follow you around, you can scare them away with a loud noise, a broom or the spray of a hose.

But mostly, the state just wants you to keep your eyes open for these fowls. So if you spot a tom, or peek a poult, record the sighting. There are two ways to participate in the survey: You can record individual observations through an online form or by downloading and printing the Turkey Brood Survey and mailing it to Brood Survey, MassWildlife Field Headquarters, 1 Rabbit Hill Road Westborough, MA 01581.

Trump holds 'Celebration of America' event day after disinviting Eagles

One day after disinviting the Super Bowl champions, the president held a different type of event.

jovan.alford@metro.us

President Donald Trump stood proudly with his hand over his heart, while mouthing the words to the National Anthem at the White House on Tuesday afternoon. It was the kind of kickoff he wanted for the "Celebration of America" event, which replaced the canceled Philadelphia Eagles championship event.

On Monday night, the president disinvited the Super Bowl champions from the White House, who were supposed to be honored for their victory on Tuesday.

The White House released a statement from the president later Monday night, explaining how Eagles players disagree with his stance on standing for the national anthem, hence the rescinded invite.

Trump explained the importance of standing for the national anthem and then veered off to talking about the economy in front of the Celebration of America crowd.

"We love our country. We respect our flag and we always proudly stand for the national anthem. We will always stand for the national anthem," Trump told the audience.

"We stand to honor our military and to honor our country and to remember the fallen heroes who never made it home," Trump continued. "We stand to show our love for our fellow citizens and our magnificent Constitution. We stand to pay tribute to the incredible Americans who came before us and the heroic sacrifices they made."

Earlier in the day, the White House sent out another statement reiterating the president's stance and blaming the Eagles for abandoning their fans.

According to White House Press Secretary Sarah Sanders, the Eagles notified the White House on Thursday, May 31, that 81 individuals within the organization would be attending the celebration.

"We love our country. We respect our flag and we always proudly stand for the national anthem."

Donald Trump

However, things reportedly changed late Friday, with the Eagles contacting the White House to try to reschedule the event. But according to Sanders, the dates that the Eagles proposed did not work in line with the president's overseas travel plans.

Then at Tuesday's press briefing, Sanders made the claim that by Eagles changing their commitment at the last minute, they pulled a "political stunt."

"The Eagles are the ones who tried to change their commitment at the eleventh hour," she said per CNN. "If this wasn't a political stunt by the Eagles franchise, then they wouldn't have planned to attend the event and then backed out at the last minute."

This is just the latest installation of Trump vs. the NFL saga, where he has interjected himself into the national anthem protests conversation.

Eagles safety Malcolm Jenkins, who was one of the four known players to originally say that he would not attend the celebration and demonstrated peacefully during the regular season, responded to the White House's statement on Twitter.

Jenkins wrote about all the work he and his teammates have done in the community, that no one on the team knelt during the 2017 season, and pointed out how it is a "lie" to paint Eagles players as "anti-America, anti-flag, and anti-military."

"We've fed the hungry, we've mentored our youth, we've fought to create opportunities for communities and individuals who have been disenfranchised, we've given scholarships, and the list goes on," he said.

Jenkins added: "It's not our job. No one elected us to do this. We do it because we love this country and our communities. Everyone, regardless of race or socioeconomic status, deserves to be treated equally. We are fighting for racial and social equality."

After nearly two years of waiting, Boston Chops is finally open in Downtown Crossing.

It took a lot of work to restore the 10,000-pound bank vault.

Boston Chops arrives in Downtown Crossing

It's taken nearly two years, but Boston Chops is finally open in Downtown Crossing.

The latest venture by Boston Urban Hospitality Group's Brian Piccini and chef Chris Coombs has been an intense labor of love, as their team had to overcome a few unique challenges in order to get the space ready. Located inside the 1890 Old Colony Trust Bank building at Temple Place, the new Boston Chops turned out to be a bigger undertaking than expected, as they wanted to give the venue an upgrade without sacrificing its classic aesthetic.

According to Coombs, one of the biggest issues involved dealing with the space's floor-to-ceiling marble walls, which made wiring and plumbing a bit more difficult. Restoring the 10,000-pound bank vault in the restaurant's downstairs area also proved to be a challenge, as plasma cutters and welders were needed to cut through the concrete walls and steel plates.

"In the city of Boston, people build skyscrapers faster than that," Coombs says. "I can't say that I'll be in any big hurry to retrofit any banks anytime soon."

The hard work has paid off, though, as the new Boston Chops is a luxurious and elegant evolution of the "urban steak bistro" concept made famous by the original South End restaurant. The Downtown Crossing location features larger tables and more space, as well as wrought iron streetlamps, vaulted ceilings and velvet and leather seating. The venue also boasts three private dining rooms, three separate bars, a wine room, plus a lounge area located in the bank vault which Coombs calls "one of the coolest spaces in Boston."

If you go

52 Temple Pl., Boston
bostonchops.com

As an avid social media user, Coombs is very excited about the new Instagram table too. Since the restaurant doesn't have any natural lighting, the special section is basically a mini-photo studio where guests can snap amazing pictures of their meals thanks to adjustable lights controlled via an app.

"Right now, we've got about 100 active requests to sit at the Instagram table," Coombs says. "People are very interested."

Of course, you can't forget about the food. Overseen by Coombs, executive chef Adrienne Wright will helm the kitchen, serving up elevated takes on steakhouse classics like prime bone-in ribeye and cuts of Chateaubriand. The restaurant will have an expanded raw bar as well, highlighted by the additions of caviar and King crab legs.

"You can show up to Boston Chops at any time and get a great meal, be treated well, have a fantastic bottle of wine and really have a heightened experience," Coombs says. "As a chef, as a businessman, as an entrepreneur, this really was the natural evolution of the Boston Chops concept." MATT JUUL

'The Office' trivia will take over this Cambridge restaurant

If you're an expert in all things Dunder Mifflin and know the entire script to "Threat Level Midnight" by heart, then you'll definitely want to check out this Cambridge restaurant's "The Office" trivia night.

Brush up on your bears, beets and "Battlestar Galactica" because Glass House is hosting a special event on Wednesday dedicated to everyone's favorite sitcom about a wacky paper company from Scranton, Pennsylvania. "The Office" trivia night coincides with the kick off of the Kendall Square hotspot's new Kegger Wednesday series, so guests who stop by to show off their knowledge of Michael Scott and his crew will also get the chance to sip on beers courtesy of Zero Gravity Brewery.

The keg will be tapped on the Glass House patio beginning at 4 p.m. on Wednesday, and attendees will be able to purchase Zero Gravity brews throughout the evening until the run out. "The Office" trivia night will also be held in the outdoor space beginning at 6 p.m.

Teams of four will go head-to-head during the contest to see who's the biggest fan of the show in Boston. Make sure to stop by the festivities early as registration will only be available on a first-come, first-serve basis at the venue.

'Condor' star Max Irons on updating the spy classic

The actor leads a stellar ensemble cast in the new series.

ANDREW HUSBAND
letters@metro.us

"Condor" debuts on the AT&T Audience Network Wednesday at 10 p.m.
AUDIENCE NETWORK

The 1975 Sydney Pollack film "Three Days of the Condor," which starred Robert Redford, Faye Dunaway and Max von Sydow, remains a masterful thriller decades later. While loosely based on the James Grady novel "Six Days of the Condor," however, Pollack's movie serves as the primary inspiration for the new television adaptation, "Condor."

At the center of Todd Katzberg and Jason Smilovic's modern take on the spy classic is English-Irish actor Max Irons, who plays Joe Turner, a CIA analyst who goes on the run after everyone else in his office is murdered by assassins. The "Condor" star has never lead a major American production, but as Irons tells Metro, he was up for the challenge, especially since the cast includes William Hurt, Mira Sorvino and Brendan Fraser.

"When I signed onto this, I think I was the first. You're always over the moon and very excited, but you're always like, 'Oh god. I wonder what the cast is going to be like? Is it going to be good?" says Irons. "Then William Hurt signed on. He's such an incredible actor. He's one of these guys who has this fierce muscularity that can terrify a person, but he also has this deep, profound sensitivity, and he can do them both at once."

Irons has trouble running out of nice things to say about Sorvino, Fraser and Bob Balaban, who round out the show's "top brass," so to speak. The actor also praises many of the decisions made by the showrunners.

Katzberg and Smilovic's innovative approach to the story is primarily what drew Irons to "Condor" in the first place.

"A lot TV shows that occupy this space — thriller meets politics — and they're often presented simplistically," he says. "This particular show, however, pays careful attention to never being politically judgemental either way. The writers try to present a balanced argument for a rather complex set of issues. They invite the audience to draw their own conclusions, instead of giving them all the answers."

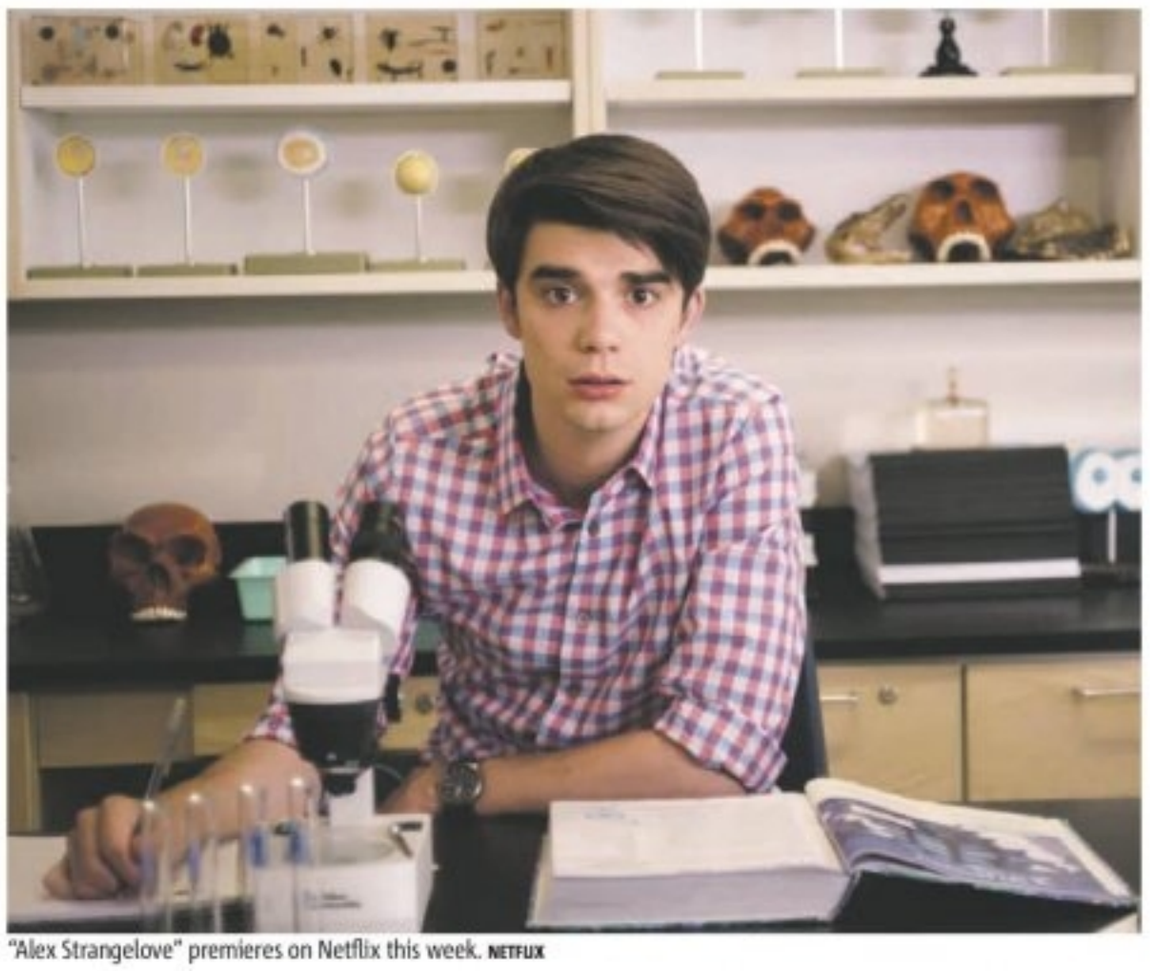
Why it took a decade to make 'Alex Strangelove'

Director Craig Johnson opens up his new Netflix rom-com.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
GregoryWakeman@metro.us



"Alex Strangelove" premieres on Netflix this week. NETFLIX

It took 10 years for "Alex Strangelove" to make it from script to screen.

Despite Craig Johnson's trials and tribulations trying to make the zany romantic-comedy, which revolves around the titular character struggling to come to terms with his sexuality in his final year of high school, the writer and director can still remember exactly where he was when he came up with the idea.

"It sparked after I went to see the singer Mika in New York," Johnson says. "It struck me how many out of the closet teenagers were at the show. They were living out and proud. I just thought, 'Wow! High school is a different place to what it was when I was there in the '90s.'"

At the show, Johnson took a spontaneous trip down memory line.

"I was thinking about my own journey of sexual identity and confusion," he says. "I just thought about being in high school today, where things are more progressive and open."

"I also wanted to tell my circuitous coming out story, which took me well into my mid 20s to figure out," he adds. "I wanted to cram that into one kid's senior year of high school. And then couch the whole thing in the traditional American high school movie genre with all kinds of party scenes and sexcapades. I knew that I hadn't seen that before. So I wrote that back in 2008. Well, the first draft at least."

At this point things became much more complicated, as Johnson and "Alex Strangelove" became entangled in development hell.

"The problem was that I didn't have any roles for movie stars," Johnson says. "People would say, 'We love this. We get it. The conflict being a kid struggling with his sexuality. But it being a fun high-school sex comedy. Could you rewrite it? Beef up a role for a teacher and then we will be off to the races.'"

Johnson admits that he used their suggestions while attempting rewrites, but they never felt right.

"I was like, 'I'm sorry, this is the story. We are with the kids,'" Johnson says. "So it really took Netflix coming and saying, 'Hey, our business model doesn't require a movie star in the lead role. We love this. Cast whoever you want and have fun.'"

The freedom provided by Netflix allowed Johnson to make the film that he had always envisioned, which he believes approaches the romantic comedy genre from a truly unique point of view.

"I hope the film invites everyone to the table. All teenagers. Gay, straight and everyone in between," Johnson says. "I wanted to even take the, 'I've got to lose my virginity before prom night' story, and freshen it up for 2018."

"Alex Strangelove" debuts on Netflix June 8.

How to cool off without killing the planet this summer

Staying cool doesn't have to come at a cost.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

The intense sticky heat of summer generally puts most of us in a ethical catch-22 scenario. Do we accept our fate of being sweaty shells of our normal selves for the next three to four months, or keep our air conditioners at a constant hum all summer long. While making your apartment as a cool as a meat locker can be one of life's greatest joys, most window mounted air conditioners can be damaging to the environment if they are not working correctly. Here are some ways that you can cool off your sweltering apartment without killing the planet this summer.

Turn your apartment into a jungle

By cramming as many house plants into your apartment, they will begin to recycle that dead air that is sucking the life out of you and will even bring the overall temperature down in the process. Areca Palm Trees are a great choice for this effect and will add a tropical flavor to your home. Another great option is keeping an Aloe Vera Plant as they will remove toxins from the air while cooling things down. Plus, once you wind up getting that inevitable sunburn, you can use it's leaves to cool down swelling and irritation.

The trusty bowl of ice in front of a fan hack

Now this is a life hack that seems to good to be true. Instead of relying on an air conditioning window unit that could potentially release greenhouse gas into the world outside, you could mimic the cooling effects of this machine by placing a bowl of ice in front of a regular house fan. The great thing is that once the ice melts over time, you can just simply put the bowl back into your freezer or fill it up with more ice!

Set your ceiling fan to counterclockwise

Most people neglect to change the direction that their ceiling fans spin from winter into warmer weather. This may not seem like something you would normally have to pay attention to, but it can make a huge difference. By switching your ceiling fan to spin from clockwise to counterclockwise, it will cause the air to flow straight down rather than spreading the air to fill the space of the room.

Using blinds or blackout curtains

Keeping cool without an air conditioning window unit can be even harder if your apartment faces the street and has little shade from the sun. So if you decide not to go with an air conditioning window unit, keep in mind that "shade" is the name of the game. By installing blinds or blackout curtains for your windows, you can cut the temperature down dramatically as the summer starts to sizzle.

HURRICANE BELICHICK

Tom Brady and Rob Gronkowski showed up to minicamp in Foxboro Tuesday, likely ending the drama that has encapsulated the Patriots franchise over the past four months. There was just one sign during the day that tension remains — when Bill Belichick verbally tore into the Pats offense for a false start. (Reminder: We are in the month of June.)

A steaming Belichick dropped repeated F-bombs at his offense, and made the entire unit run a lap — including offensive coordinator Josh McDaniels ("That's what you get for trying to steal my job, A-hole!").

Who says the Patriots don't know how to have fun?

LONG TEARS INTO FOX NEWS

You know who the man is?

Chris Long.

The former Patriots defensive end and current Eagles DE rightfully went right at Fox News on Tuesday for showing still images of Eagles players kneeling on TV while discussing Trump's ridiculous cancellation of the Eagles event at the White House. The issue here is that the images of the players kneeling weren't for the National Anthem. The Eagles players were kneeling because they were praying — either for an injured player during the game or after the game had concluded.

"Fox News used faith of Christian men dishonestly to push an agenda," Long tweeted Tuesday. "That wasn't an 'error,' but intentional and strategic. They've deleted the segment + apologized on Twitter, but many viewers don't have Twitter. An on-air apology to all Christians would be the classy move."

Don't hold your breath for that one.

CELTS-LAKERS NBA FINALS?

By process of elimination, the Los Angeles Lakers are now the favorites to land LeBron James in NBA free agency.

Fox Sports' Colin Cowherd recently said a source told him that there is "no perfect option" for LeBron in free agency as the Lakers, Cavaliers, Rockets and Sixers all have "issues." But it becoming more and more clear that the Lakers have — by far — the least amount of issues.

The Rockets should already be fourth on the "most likely" list for LeBron.

In short, there is cap juggling … and then there is the miracle that Rocket GM Daryl Morey would have to pull off in order to even entertain signing LeBron.

The Sixers have GM issues and LeBron would be a bad fit next to Ben Simmons and Joel Embiid.

The Cavs have zero flexibility.

That leaves the Lakers, who have managed their cap space perfectly these past two years to the point where they can sign two marquee free agents this summer. They also have young chips they could move in a trade to appease LeBron's want for veteran help.

Seems like an obvious choice.

How about a Celtics-Lakers Finals next year?

The Red Sox are nearly a lock to win with Eduardo Rodriguez on the mound this season. GETTY IMAGES

All they do is win

The Sox, and specifically Eduardo Rodriguez, have proven to be winners all season long.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

No doubt, the Red Sox (41-19) are for real this season.

There were seeds of doubt planted in late April and early May, but those seeds were most definitely washed away by the time Memorial Day came. The Sox have gone 11-4 since May 19 and just split a four-game series with the defending World Series champ Astros on the road.

There is always room for improvement in baseball however, and the Sox would benefit greatly if their entire rotation was pitching up to its capabilities.

Eduardo Rodriguez (6-1, 3.88 ERA) has certainly been living up to his name as he hasn't given up more than five runs in a game since May 5 at Texas. In the 11 games Rodriguez has pitched in this season, the Red Sox have won 10 of them.

"One thing about [Rodriguez] is that he's working at his craft and I haven't seen a pitcher with so much support in the dugout – you see Rick [Porcello] talking to him, and David [Price], and Chris [Sale]. Whatever they've got going with [Rodriguez] is good to see," Red Sox manager Alex Cora said earlier this season. "He's executing. He puts pressure on the opposition from pitch 1."

Rodriguez will get the ball at Fenway tonight (7, NESN) against Detroit, which is in second place in the American League Central despite its under .500 record at 29-32. He will be opposed by Blaine Hardy, who typically sees time as a reliever. Hardy is 2-0 this season with a 2.77 ERA in 26.0 innings pitched.

One Sox starter that has not been matching his reputation this season is Drew Pomeranz, who is just 1-3 with a 6.81 ERA on the year. Pomeranz was set to start the series finale against Detroit at Fenway on Thursday but the Sox placed him on the 10-day disabled list with left biceps tendinitis. He was replaced on the Sox roster by Brandon Workman.

Eduardo Rodriguez has pitched in 11 games this season for the Red Sox and the Sox have wound up winners in 10 of those outings.

Gemini Make changes because they feel right and are realistic, not because someone else is pushing you. Bureaucratic problems will escalate if not handled properly. Take care of matters yourself.

Cancer Show everyone what you can do. Don't be afraid to be unique or approach situations in your own way. Your insight will guide you to victory. Personal improvements are favored.

Leo Take one step at a time. If you try to rush things, you will end up having to backtrack. Use your connections and intelligence to ward off any foreseeable problems.

Virgo Tread carefully and listen to what others have to say. Relationships will be tested, and responding properly to what transpires will be instrumental to effectively navigating a sticky situation.

Libra Get out and about. Enjoy interacting with people who challenge and stimulate you mentally. You'll learn a lot from someone if you are observant. Don't underestimate a peer or your employer.

Scorpio Get involved in something creative or take part in an event that requires skill, ingenuity and strength. Don't let anger take control when strategy is what's required.

Sagittarius Take a moment to observe what others do and say. Someone will take advantage of you if you are gullible, nonchalant or evasive. Stick to the truth and be direct.

Capricorn Be ready to take advantage of an opportunity that can improve your current living standard. Don't trust someone else to take care of your responsibilities. If you want something done, do it yourself.

Aquarius You are best off speaking up if someone is overbearing. Anger will not solve anything, but offering simple alternatives will. Do what's best for you and let others do as they please.

Pisces Get involved in something you enjoy doing. Expand your ideas or creative objectives, and look for an outlet to market your talents, skills or experience. Romance is highlighted.
